Enric Granados Municipal Auditorium

January to May and October to December

Fixed programme Enric Granados Municipal Auditorium

The regular season of the Enric Granados Municipal Auditorium responds to the different interests of its increasingly larger and more diverse audience.

Concert season

This season's concerts have been scheduled to present the musical panorama of many regions of the world through orchestras and soloists.

Season of the JULIÀ CARBONELL symphony orchestra

The Lleida symphony orchestra offers a stable cycle as part of the regular Auditorium programme.

Season of the Municipal Concert Band

The Lleida Municipal Concert Band accounts for part of the annual programme.

Family concert season

In this combination of narration and music, the Auditorium offers an interesting programme for families.

Opera season

The opera season is marked by a top-quality programme including a concert cycle with leading singers of light opera.

The building

The modern Enric Granados Municipal Auditorium was designed by Lleidan architects Ramon Artigues and Ramon Sanabria. Many other professionals also participated in the construction process, including Higini Arau, who holds a PhD in Acoustic Physics. Of note is the prismatic shape of the triple façade and the way the roof becomes a fourth façade when viewed from the Seu Vella. Built with slabs of natural stone to create an austere effect, the air chamber has rigid insulation to ensure the building's acoustics.

Symphonic hall

The Symphony Hall is located on the ground floor and is the largest of the two auditoriums, with an area of 880 m² and seating for 803 people. The spectacular vaulted ceiling is covered with varnished cedar panels.

Chamber music hall

The other auditorium is located in the basement and is used mainly for chamber music. It has an area of 360 m² and seats 245.

Enric Granados

Famous musician born in Lleida in 1867. Musically educated in Barcelona, he made his concert debut in 1886. His great output as a composer earned him international recognition.
